

King Snakes - cbb

Care Sheets

Scientific Name: Lampropeltis getulus sp

Native to: Depends on species

Average Length: 2-6 feet

Life Span: 10-15 years

General Information

Our King snakes are captive bred in our facility. King snakes make very good pets because they are very easy to care for, and come in a variety of different colors and patterns. Kings snakes are generally docile, curious and gentle. When your king snake gets ready to shed, the eyes will turn a milky blue and body color will start to become dull and develop a whitish sheen.

General Care

Enclosure: Use a 20 gallon aquarium for your King snake. Make sure the snake is no more than twice as long as its enclosure. Also provide hiding places and branches for the snake to climb on. Provide a secure enclosure, king snakes are known as great escape artists. Don't house king snakes together or with other snakes or reptiles.

Substrate: You can use Aspen shavings, mulch-type commercial material, dampened sphagnum moss, bark and pelleted paper.

Habitat: King snakes love hiding spaces and branches to climb on. Clean cage at least once a week.

Temperature: Temperatures should be around 75-85°F. Radiant heat is recommended. Use an under tank heater as the primary heat source.

Lighting: King snakes need 8-12 hours of day of light. Use black or infrared light to view snakes at night.

Food and Water: Babies will feed on small pinkie mice. As the King snake grows it can eat fuzzy mice and smaller rats. King snake appetites diminish during winter months. Always provide a fresh bowl of water. King snakes love to soak in their water, especially before they shed.
